

The strengths of the writing I did in this unit improved on the level that I became more aware of what I write. For example, if a sentence was to not make sense for any reason like grammar, punctuation, etc, then I would right away be able to notice and make some corrections to it. If you were to revise the writing you did for this unit, what would you want to do differently? For the 2nd paper, I did notice that I do sound a little formal in the paper, so perhaps I would have changed the way I wrote in terms of writing in my “own” language. The improvement in critical thinking for the free writes in a class led to me gaining ideas for my second paper which was a helpful improvement from my perspective. What were your favorite readings/activities, and which readings/activities didn’t feel effective for you? I think the recent “Beyond Vietnam” readings was not practical for me because even though it was interesting, I didn’t feel the connection with this reading in terms of being engaging in my opinion. The Kent university social movement was my favorite reading because the pictures of the brutality that occurred to the students captured my attention due to the fact that deaths were involved as well as guns being involved to control a riot that happened as a result.
